Integrity

To retain the confidence and support of our audiences, honesty and openness must characterise everything we do.

The standards of behaviour expected of BBC employees are those necessary for the proper operation of the workplace, to maintain mutual trust and confidence between the employer and employee. Please refer back to the BBC anti-fraud statement.

The BBC's integrity is underpinned by a number of principal policies and guidelines, please follow links to the right. For other areas of policy and statutory compliance visit the Compliance Portal.

All staff may find themselves in posession of confidential information (in any format) as part of their work and must comply with relevant processes and controls. "Leaking" of material for personal gain is a fraud and will be dealt with according to our disciplinary action proceedures which can result in criminal proceedings and/or dismissal.
