ASKING THE RIGHT QUESTIONS – Research in PracticeAUTUMN 2011*MC71116A WEDNESDAYS 11.00 A.M. to 1.00 P.M. in Screen 1, (MRB)*Media Research Building Compulsory core course)

This course aims to equip students with the critical, analytical and practical skills to research and construct stories for public consumption. This involves three elements: the procedural – asking the right questions of whom, when and where; the political – knowing the organisational context in which the story has emerged, the constructs in which it will be seen, and the ways in which it will be perceived; and the personal – knowing what you can or cannot bring to the story, and managing the human factors that will enhance or obscure your story.

The lectures in the first half of term concentrate on the British system, governmental and local, and in particular on the many different opportunities now available to online researchers. The second half of term concentrates on specialist territories that require particular understanding and research skills, from investigative journalism and statistics to politics and the law. In week 1 you will be assigned a subject brief – a 'beat' – a research report on which must be undertaken, written up and uploaded online on Learn.Gold by the end of Week 5 (Friday 4th November). In Week 7, you will be set a further research task that will be deliverable before the beginning of the Spring Term (Friday 6th January). Each of these amounts to 50% of this course assessment.

Outcomes:

By the end of this lecture series you should:

- Understand the British political system, both national and local, and how to access and interrogate its representatives
- Have a working knowledge of research resources online and elsewhere, knowing how to access and validate them while recognising unreliable sources
- Know how to understand complexity in issues as diverse as fraud & statistics, and have the competence to render them comprehensible to a lay audience
- Have evolved a healthy scepticism about 'official sources' and know how to interpret press statements, public pronouncements and the latest figures

1. Sources and Systems(5th October)*PETER LEE-WRIGHT

- The evolution of a political press and broadcast industry and their relations with established methods of government information and regulation.
- Recognising the way stories are spun and how they play for the different interests and how to unpick them for the audience.
- The development of research processes, areas of expertise and specialist knowledge.
- Negotiating and managing essential access to places and people, and building contacts.
- ALLOCATION OF TEAMS & BRIEFS FOR THE BEAT REPORT EXERCISE.
